TE AO MĀRAMA WHAKAPAPA

Te Ao Mārama, the New Zealand Māori Dental Association, was established at the first national Māori Hui for oranga niho held at Ōhinemutu, Rotorua in February 1995. The hui was called to disseminate the results of a Māori oral health research project undertaken by the University of Otago dental student Pauline Koopu supervised by Emeritus Prof John Broughton. The Hui was unanimous in its decision to form a new national Māori oral health organisation.

The kaupapa of the new organisation was “Hei oranga niho mo te iwi Māori” - Good oral health for Māori, for life. The founding Tūmuaki was Mrs Inez Kingi (a former school dental nurse); the kaumatua was Mr Pihopa Kingi; and the kaiwhakahaere was Dr John Broughton. The name, Te Ao Mārama was given to the new organisation by Pihopa Kingi from the name of the whare in which the first hui was held. The objectives and constitution of the new organisation were ratified by the membership 12 months later at the second national hui. The objectives were to:

1. Uphold Māori oral health as guaranteed under Te Tiriti o Waitangi
2. Pursue the delivery of oral health services to Māori at the optimum level
3. Safeguard and promote the oral health of te iwi Māori; and
4. Promote the opportunity for Te iwi Māori to access quality oral health services

Today Te Ao Mārama includes representatives across the entire oral health sector throughout ngā hau e whā. The Executive team is a voluntary board elected by the membership at the AGM. In recent years the Executive has focused on strengthening the infrastructure of the organisation to accommodate the needs and aspirations of its growing membership, as well as fulfill its role as a key voice for Māori in oral health.

The Te Ao Mārama logo was designed by Mr. Wayne Hapi of Dunedin in 1996. The two-manua depicted in this whakaahua are figures synonymous in our culture with being guardian entities. The intertwining arms are representative of the fact that good health and oral hygiene go hand in hand with spiritual well being. The koru designs are synonymous with the nurturing and caring side of our Māori culture.
